

Of the several matters under consideration by the commission concerning amateur licensing I support this one. The commission should take into account that about 5% of the male population over age 45 no longer have the ability to discern the the subtle differences in a "dot" and a "dash". Thank you